Warning to wives

WITH 40 per cent of marriages ending in divorce, it's a surprise to find that one in four Australian women do not arrange proper legal documentation in order to protect themselves if their relationship fails. And one in five women say they believe in the "forever-after fairytale" and trust their partner implicitly so there is no need, according to a survey by The Heat Group, Australia's leading marketer to women. Heat managing director Gillian Franklin says 65 per cent of women believe property is a good investment but they either couldn't afford to buy property on their own or believe a property purchase will cement their relationship further.
